Can your business
benefit from WorkFirst?
All signs point to yes.

In many fields, finding qualified personnel can be very difficult. Or easy if you fully use WorkFirst services, Washington’s welfare to work program that provides job-ready candidates to business throughout the state. It’s a program specifically designed to meet the labor challenges facing today’s businesses. There, you’ll find a pool of qualified and dedicated employees, as well as tax credits, training subsidies and worker support services such as childcare and transportation aid. It’s simply a great resource for your hiring needs.

Everyone benefits
financially from WorkFirst.
Especially business.

Not only does the potential employee benefit financially from WorkFirst, but the employer does, too. Because businesses of all sizes can reduce recruitment costs by using WorkFirst’s employment services, job fairs and hiring events. Not only that, they can save money through our employee training programs and tax credits. For example, the Work Opportunity Tax Credit (WOTC) can reduce a business’ federal tax liability by as much as $2,400 per new hire. And that’s simply one of many examples of how WorkFirst saves you money.

It’s the solution for your hiring needs. But don’t just take our word for it.

More than 28,000 employers in Washington state have hired WorkFirst participants. Here’s what they have to say.

Kim Wallace, human resources assistant, Primex Aerospace, in Moses Lake said,

“The program’s an advantage to us. It gives us one more avenue to find workers. We save costs, too, so it’s good for Primex, for Washington state and for the prospective employee.”

Furthermore, Vicki Winn, vice president and manager for Washington Mutual, said,

“Not only do these candidates perform in line with other entry-level bankers. Their attendance and overall retention is much better.”
